

PEASANT UPRISING IN RUMANIA

- I. Russian troops are reported to have been used to suppress an uprising sparked by the regime's stepped-up drive to achieve 100% collectivization in eastern Rumania.

25X1

25X1X7

A.

[redacted] all the inhabitants in one village were killed or hospitalized by Soviet troops. Casualties in another, ~~unnamed~~, nearby village were not as severe.

25X1 37

II.

[redacted] renewed regime pressures for collectivization were meeting strong resistance, requiring armed intervention, in areas of eastern Rumania.

25X1

~~SECRET~~

~~SECRET~~
Approved For Release 2002/09/04 : CIA-RDP79R00890A000900050043-6

- A. Western observers have been denied permission to visit these areas during the past ten days--the first such refusal since last November, when a polio epidemic swept Rumania.

III. There is no evidence that this peasant unrest has spread to other rural areas.

- A. The apparent need to use Russian troops to suppress the peasants suggests that the uprising was severe and that Rumanian security forces were unwilling or unable to deal with it.